Christine Ten Eyck, after a raft trip down the Colorado River in 1985, moved west from Texas to Arizona where she established a thriving landscape architectural practice emphasizing regional residential, hospitality and public projects in arid climates. After 22 years in Arizona, she returned to Texas and started the Austin studio in 2007. With a mission of connecting the urban dweller with nature, her firm strives to create transformative landscapes that celebrate the region, culture of its people and the sacred paths of our most precious resource, water. She and her firm strive to create high performance urban landscapes that reinforce civic presence of their projects while creating engaging places for people and nature to coexist within the context of the city.
